

Awareness Raising

on human rights,
non-discrimination and
inclusion at local level

WHAT IS AWARENESS RAISING FOR HUMAN RIGHTS, NON-DISCRIMINATION AND INCLUSION AT LOCAL LEVEL?

Local communities still face challenges related to discrimination and gaps in the provision of social services to Roma, youth, persons with disabilities, poor, migrants, refugees, homeless and others living under social risk. At the same time, the local community stakeholders often demonstrate lack of knowledge and understanding about the human rights, non-discrimination and social inclusion of these vulnerable groups. Consequently, there is resistance to social change which makes the efforts and measures of the local authorities insufficient and less effective.

Municipalities as major political strength in the local community and as guardians of the public interest have both opportunity and responsibility to make the local stakeholders more aware of the issue as a critical step in ensuring a prosperous environment for all its citizens based on the “Leave No One Behind” principle.

Awareness raising (AR) efforts that will result in social change, should not be ad-hoc actions, but rather planned long-term activities which will systematically address the issue from various perspectives.

Awareness raising has three aims: firstly, increasing the knowledge of vulnerable groups about their fundamental rights and enabling them to demand those rights self-consciously. Secondly, making society aware about those groups, sensitising them for their situation and reducing stereotypes. Thirdly, creating an understanding of relevant stakeholders about the situation of vulnerable groups, their needs and drawing their attention to the gaps between the needs and social services offered. The strategic approach to raising awareness includes:

R- Research of the specific situation and underlying reasons for discrimination and exclusion of vulnerable groups in the community based on sound data, information gathering and analysis; identifying key stakeholders.

A- Action planning by setting the objectives including the three levels of awareness raising approach targeted at vulnerable groups to recognize and seek their rights, other key stakeholders and targeting the general public; identifying partners, developing key messages, selecting and developing awareness raising tools.

C- Communication principles including importance and types of communication messages, how to develop message aimed at diverse target audience, ways to apply those messages in the communication products. It also includes the importance of proactive cooperation with the media as partners in outreach to the target groups and ways for cooperation with media.

E- Evaluation by using AIDA concept of measuring results and effects from the awareness raising approach.

The approach promotes cross-sector collaboration understanding that change in attitudes and behaviour requires involvement of the whole community including the local institutions, civil society and the business sector in decreasing discrimination against vulnerable groups and providing support and adequate services.
